In an interview just before the conferand Mr. Harriman addressed himself to the pewspapers in a tone somewhat different from that which he has employed recently. He said, for instance:

It s pitiful, but in the end, whether we are engaged in hunting bears or not, everything will come out right. The weaklings will be siminated, and that will be for the good of the market.

Mr. Harriman went on to say that he and lost all interest in the Illinois Central ight, but he wanted to know how a man ike himself, who was compelled to stay in Chicago by circumstances over which he had not complete control, could amuse himself. Considerable excitement has been caused among small stockholders in Illinois by the fact that the Harriman side has gone into he market for shares at a price ably greater than that indicated by any market quotations. Yesterday three stock-holders in the meeting, two men and a woman, approached a man who they thought represented the Fish interests. One of the

"I wish you would tell Mr. Fish the Harriman people have offered me 1:0 for our block of stock. We have got about 100 shares. We will sell it to Mr. Fish for 150. Of course if we sell it to Mr. Harriman we will be obliged to revoke our Fish provies, even when actual possession of proxies, even when actual possession of stock is not transferred."

By these and other manifestations it has become evident that neither Mr. Harriman nor Mr. Fish knows exactly what his

At the trial of Charles Smith for burglary a few months ago Terhune swore that he saw months ago Terhune swore that he saw smith in a candy shop in West 145th street that had been robbed. A younger police-man named Kearney testified that while the robbery was on Terhune's post, he was the last policeman to get there, and that was after the burglar had skipped. The maximum penalty for perjury at a trial is twenty years.

Taken by the right end this was a good bull weapon, but taken by the other end it was otherwise. The hears fixed it to suit their own propage, and so what the traders on the floor saw was The hears fixed it to suit their own proposes, and so what the traders on the floor sow was that the Clearing House had found it necessary to come to the assistance of a New York national bank. "This," the hearn argued, "shows that the bank needed shelstance," and they sold stocks for a turn, wholly disregarding the fact that many of the active issues were down to new low records for the year. They knew that the assurances of the soundness of the bank given by the Clearing oundness of the bank given by the Clearing House were the stamp of an absolute guaran tee, but they also knew that in the prevail state of pervousness it was very easy to start nother outburst of selling.

The selling of stocks was fast and furious from about noon until the middle of the las hour, when it was announced that the Mer-cantile National Bank had settled its debit balance at the Clearing House and that the latter institution had called upon all the directors of the bank to send in their resigna-tions. The Street then began to feel that the worst feature in the situation had disappeared and the market entered upon an orderly recovery. The bank called loans, causing a severe decline in certain issues that were supposed to have figured as collateral; but while rumor busied itself more about the affairs of this institution than about any other subject the opinion of conservative interests was that while that matter served as a motive for selling by the traders, the principal cause of the selling in the market was of an entirely different kind.

American Smelting and Refining was the real storm centre. There was large and urgent seld by the same interests. The reason was said to be that a loan in which Smelters, Amalgamated Copper, Union Pacific and Southern Pacific had figured as collateral had been called by a prominent trust com-pany and that as a result all these stocks had to be thrown upon the market in quan-tity. All of them made new low records for the year, with the exception of Southern Pacific, which, although it did not drop quite to its low point of March last, sold lower than at any previous time since it was placed ipon a 6 per cent. basis. In connection with the break in these stocks it was notable that National Lead and Federal Mining and Smelting also made new low records for the present novement, the latter declining on its first transaction to points below its last previous ale, and a break relatively much more severe occurred in a curb stock controlled by the interests. The liquidation in all appeared to come from a single source, prob-

United States Steel was the Gibraltar of the market. The storm beat all around it, but could not affect it. Wreck and ruin were everywhere else, but Steel stood up unharmed. The actual assault proved that instead of being weak the stock possessed almost impregnable strength. Naturally traders wondered where all the buying of the stock came from, and the more attention they gave the matter the more they became convinced that there was absorption of the strongest kind. Steel common appears to have passed almost completely out of speculative channels and to have found a lodgment in the hands of per-

Supporting orders were put into some of the most active stocks when the market appeared to be on the point of demoralization, and these helped to stem the tide of liquidation and to impress some of the shorts with the advisability of covering. Without the hardly have accomplished much, for the vol-ume of liquidation was almost overwhelming. But the short interest was so large that the overing of even a relatively small part of it sufficed to turn the tide. Whether the scale buying put into the market represented anything more than a movement to prevent the trading from falling into utter demoralization could not be determined before the close of the session, but there certainly was no lack of operators who believed that nothing more could be hoped for than that a better tone might be given to the market to enable it to bear another flood of liquidation if the necessity for this should arise in the future.

Transactions in all stocks aggregated about 1,350,000 shares, of which four issues, Smelters, Amalgamated Copper, Union Pacific Reading, contributed nearly one-half. These stocks were among the very weakest on the list, the liquidation in the three first named coming largely from a single source, while that in Reading proceeded from several Reports of "Bradstreet's" and "Dun's" on the State of Trade. Dun's and Bradstreet's this week report a continuation of the stringency of the money market and of the resulting slowness in col-

Trade, crop and industrial reports are rather more irregular. Interest as to dis-tributive trade has now largely passed from the wholesale and jobbing branches to retail trade, the development and proportions of will be closely scrutinized from now on So far the reports as to this line are conflicting, being best in parts of the Northwest, South-west and South, and relatively slackest at the East, which needs sharp, cold weather for best activities. Jobbing business is fair as a whole, it being noted that house trade is rather quiet, while filling in orders vary with sections reporting. The money strinrency is an additional feature which attracts attention, affecting as it does the item of col ections on past transactions. The weight of evidence, particularly from the larger cities. is that payments are not prompt, but it might be noted that quite a few cities report improvement this week, most of these being at the South. As to this item of collections it may be said that holding of crops has been a subject of complaint from several . Thus the country elevators in the Northwest are reported well filled, and the outhern producers are still holding cotton, the result being an increase of the strain always felt at crop moving time . .

Autumn retail trade broadens under the stimulating influence of favorable weather and collections also improve. While reports are almost unanimous regarding the satisvolume of retail distributions of seasonable goods, in other sections of commercial and industrial activity there is some irregularity, attributed in most cases to high rates for money, which induces conservatism in preparations for the future. Yet leading cities at the West and South find no restriction in supplementary orders at wholesale and jobbers report that new lines for spring are well received. The cotton goods market was slightly unsettled by Chicago special sale, but there was no response at New England mills, owing to the fact that orders cover production well into the future. Copper declined still lower, but prices were steady in the leading metal industry. Another phenomenal record of immigration was made last month, 98,694 aliens arriving in this country, or 3,353 more than in September, 1908, while the movement of perchandise showed an increase of $3,699,473 in imports and a loss of $3,145,653 in exports, as compared with the same month last year.

The favorable trade balance of $29,000,000 was much more satisfactory than that of August, and further improvement should follow the larger outgo of farm staples this Street flurries or anything else. These two factors, the firm spot prices and the December manipulation explain the market's resisting power at the present time. Even east of the Mississippi, where marketing is on a larger scale, prices are surprisingly well maintained. Liverpool knows that the Southern farmer is stubborn if New York and New Orleans don't. Liverpool acknowledges that the firmness of that market is largely due to the scarcity of Southern orferings. And furthermore no matter what takes place in Wall Street big interests are either short of December or they are not. If they are short they must pay the market price whatever may betted at the Stock Exchange. The dry goods trade, especially at the Last, does not seem disposed to follow the Chicago cuto. Call buillish speculation in the general list of cotton futures candor compels the admission that it isn't there. Most men are decidedly dubious about bulling any market at the present time. They stand in constant dread of some him happening in the financial or dry goods world. They believe that there is to be cotton enough and to spare and that the Southern farmer who is holding for 15 cents is simply enacting the role of the ostrich who thrusts his head into the sand and refuses to look facts in the face. This is the situation in the rough as it strikes most people.

Firmness of spots and December is one of the great and redeeming traits from the standpoint of the bullish operator though back of that he maintains there is a far better state of trade in cotton goods and a far better state of trade in cotton goods and a far better state of trade in cotton goods and a far better state of trade in cotton goods and has been backed that he maintains there is a far better state of trade in cotton goods and a far better state of trade in cotton goods and has been superficed for Texas and the Southwest general outlook, the legitimate surroundings of the situation continue to point to the proteability of lower prices. Cotton was comparatively steady. The action of the market is rather remarkable. Its very narrowness and jurely professional character seems in some sort a kind of in-surance. Were it a big, broad public market there is no knowing what might have happened. However this may be cotton futures a firmer front to adverse news of the day than almost anything else. The ember premium over January was still high—at one time 37 points—and the Southern spot markets show a firmness that indicates plainly enough a determination on the part of the Southern farmer not to be driven from his present position by tight money, Wall his present position by tight money, Wall street flurries or anything else.
